Do you want to change your perspective on landscapes, and yourself?

The course wild perspectives is an outdoor-based summer course around the theme of human-nature interconnectedness and landscape architecture from a more than human perspective. Through workshops, excursions and creative assignments students will learn about humans as actors in nature, how landscapes come to look like they do and how they could look differently from a non-human perspective. We will work with theatre and design to stimulate transformative and engaging interaction with the course material. To experience the landscape from wild perspectives we will do a two-day hike and bushcrafting trip. On the last evening, students present their theatre performances or landscape designs during a pizza & campfire session. Additionally, students reflect on their own transformative journey in an individual essay.
